*Based on 2014-2015 enrollment

Here are the facts and assumptions to be aware of as you review the breakdown.

- The overall estimated cost to districts is based on full implementation of vouchers when this fall's kindergarten/pre-K students become seniors. At that time, every non-public student will be eligible for a voucher without ever having attended public school.
- Census data shows Oklahoma had about 790,000 school-age children (ages 4-18) in 2014.
- Public school enrollment during the same time frame was 688,300, which leaves about 101,700 school-age children whose families chose non-public schooling options.
- We reviewed the most recent private school enrollment data from NCES to try to better understand the potential impact. The data was available by grade and showed a considerable amount of attrition as students age. The grade breakdown and attrition were factors in our projections and were extrapolated across the non-public school student population.
- For calculation purposes because of the proposed sliding scale based on income, we assumed the socioeconomic status of non-public students is similar to that of public school students.
- This projection does not account for any growth in the number of students pursuing non-public schooling options or growth in public school enrollment.
- This projection also does NOT include transfers from public to non-public options.
- The projection assumes about 80 percent of non-public students will receive vouchers.
- Upon full implementation in 14 years, the estimated annual impact to common education is $250 million. For school districts, this amounts to $363 less funding per student. (The $250 million divided by FY15 enrollment.)
- Every district will be affected. As written, the bills call for the state Education Department to set aside the voucher money before state aid is allocated among districts.
- This means even if none of your students leave school with a voucher, you will have at least $363 less per student!

For all of these reasons, we believe this is a conservative projection of the cost of vouchers. Of course, $363 a student may initially seem small. Consider this: state leaders have been vocal about the myriad ways they believe new laws or mandates can force more money into the classroom. In a classroom of 25 students, the impact of vouchers could be $9,000 or more. Even the first-year impact is significant in light of the cuts sustained this year and those that are still expected.
